Reviewer B:

1. The abstract provides very limited information. It may not offer a clear enough picture of the research methodology, sample, or findings. It would be better if more detailed information is provided in the abstract.
2. For a more comprehensive review, the article should offer further details about the methodology used, the statistical analyses supporting the findings, and the practical implications of these results. Additionally, ensure that the article includes a section providing sufficient theoretical background to help readers understand the research context.
3. Based on the information you've given, the study population consists of all employees in the government college, including teachers, heads of departments, division directors, and employees of various age groups. However, it would be helpful to have more details about the following aspects:
  - Sampling Method: How were the participants selected from the study population? Did you use random sampling, stratified sampling, or some other method?
  - Data Collection: You mentioned using questionnaires, but it would be useful to know what specific questions or items were included in the questionnaires. Additionally, did you gather any other data through interviews, observations, or other means?
  - Sample Size: How many participants in each category (teachers, heads of departments, etc.) were included in the study? The sample size can impact the generalizability of the findings.
  - Data Analysis: What statistical methods were employed to analyze the collected data? It's essential to provide details on the statistical techniques used to assess the impact of sustainable development management.

Including these details in your article will make the methodology section more robust and allow readers to better understand how the research was conducted.
