ABSTRACT

Agrotourism Kampung Durian is an agricultural-based tourism destination with durian as its main commodity. Service quality and appropriate marketing strategies are the keys to enhancing competitiveness and ensuring destination sustainability. This study aims to (1) identify the level of importance (expectations) of consumers toward service quality, (2) measure the level of consumer satisfaction, and (3) formulate marketing strategies based on the 7P marketing mix. The research population consists of all visitors during the study period, with a sample of 94 respondents determined using the Slovin formula at a 10% margin of error and a purposive sampling technique. The analysis methods used are the Customer Satisfaction Index (CSI) and Importance Performance Analysis (IPA). The results show that important service attributes include tourism products, pricing, accessibility, promotion, human resource competence, service processes, and physical evidence. The CSI score of 68.99% falls into the “satisfied” category. The priority marketing strategies for Kampung Durian Agrotourism include enhancing promotion, developing digital payment methods, improving the cleanliness of the tourist area, and coordinating road access improvements, in order to increase satisfaction, loyalty, and repeat visits, as well as strengthen the destination’s image and sustainability.
